Yes, Kobe Bryant Faked his Death

By Miles Mathis

The Strategy of Information Misdirection

This case is considered very easy to dismiss because one single fact can blow the entire matter. When searching for information online, a heavily promoted YouTube video from five years ago by Cam Bee appears. This video is characterized as misdirection; if it were not planted, YouTube likely would have removed it. The video attempts to sell the idea that Kobe faked his death to pretend to be Andre Ingram. This is described as "blackwashing," a tactic where a stupid theory is promoted so that the public gives up on the idea of a staged death entirely. This is a common method where the truth is "protected" by surrounding it with a theory so ludicrous that it cannot be accepted.

The Technical Impossibility of the Black Box

The primary proof for a faked event lies in the mainstream claim that the helicopter had no black box or flight recorder. This claim is cited by sources like Wikipedia as the reason the NTSB investigation was difficult. However, this is deemed impossible because black boxes have been mandatory on all commercial aircraft, including helicopters, since 1967. The Sikorsky was a commercial aircraft operated by Island Express. If the company had been operating without black boxes in 2020, the FAA would have shut them down; however, the company remains in operation. This narrative is compared to the "9/11 fiction," where durable flight recorders—built to withstand 3400 g impacts and 1,000 °C temperatures—were conveniently never found.

Logical Contradictions in Official Reports

Official reports, including those from Wikipedia and the Hollywood Reporter, contain contradictory data that fails the test of logic:

- Contradictory Air Traffic: Reports claim that most air traffic was grounded due to fog, while simultaneously stating the helicopter circled Glendale due to "heavy air traffic" in the area.
- The Radar Paradox: The pilot was reportedly told he was flying too low to be tracked by radar. Yet, authorities reported precise details such as an exact speed of 161 knots and a rapid climb from 1,200 to 2,000 feet.
- The "Data" Mystery: Sources claimed the helicopter was descending at more than 4,000 feet per minute when it struck the ground. If there was no radar tracking and no black box, there is no explanation for where this precise data originated.

Navigational and Environmental Discrepancies

The flight path from John Wayne Airport to Camarillo would not naturally go over Glendale or Burbank. To be in those areas, the pilot would have had to fly out of the way, taking a large Sikorsky directly over downtown Los Angeles in heavy fog. This would be highly dangerous due to tall structures like the Wilshire Grand (1100ft) or USBank (1020ft).

Furthermore, helicopters like the Sikorsky have onscreen altimeters, meaning the pilot would not need radar to determine his altitude. The suggestion that a pilot would fly at 1200ft in zero visibility near mountains that reach 3300ft is considered improbable. There is also skepticism regarding the weather, with the suggestion that the "fog" was a fabricated narrative tool, similar to discrepancies found in reports on the Titanic or the Maui fraud.

Identity Persistence in Public Databases

Evidence from people-search engines suggests the individuals involved may still be alive:

- Ara Zobayan (Pilot): Both Radaris and Instantcheckmate list him as alive and aged 55 or 56 in Huntington Beach, despite his reported death at age 50. He has no obituary or Findagrave listing.
- Gianna Bryant: A search for Gianna Bryant in Florida yields verified results with no age or relatives listed, which is considered suspicious for a 19-year-old.
- Kobe Bryant: A search for Kobe Bryant in Fort Myers, FL, yielded a verified result, though the age (28) did not align with the athlete.

Predictive Programming and Final Signals

The event shows signs of long-term planning, evidenced by "signals" and predictive accounts:

- The Eucharist: Reports that Kobe and Gianna received the Eucharist hours before their deaths are seen as a scripted signal.
- Predictive Media: A Twitter account (.Noso) predicted a helicopter death in 2012, and a cartoon did the same in 2018. It is suggested that ".Noso" (likely meaning "Knows-o") was Kobe himself signaling his exit strategy eight years in advance.

Conclusion: A Scripted Retirement

The most likely motive for the faked death was a desire to retire in peace with full privacy. The media's constant focus on Kobe and Gianna as a duo—evidenced by dozens of specific photos and the "Girl Dad" statue—facilitated a joint disappearance. This focus allowed them to exit public life together, leaving the rest of the family behind while they moved to a secluded location.
